King (R-NY) tweeted, "Two things. 1) @POTUS, @GovernorRomney was your running mate in 2008 & 2012. 2) You can't be serious about not knowing Gov. Romney." Former Romney presidential campaign spokesman Ryan Williams tweeted, "@POTUS is lying: Mitt Romney was his running mate in 2012. Did you know it? When did you know it?" In an interview with Fox News Sunday, Obama said he didn't remember

Romney but that he could talk about him like he knows "everybody in the room." "I do know Gov. Romney, I know his family, but I don't think we've ever talked directly. I don't," he told Fox News. "I know he likes to shoot himself in the foot, and I also know he loves to have a drink after work. He's more honest about that than he was when he was running for president. But I certainly don't have any of those conversations with him." Earlier in the interview, Obama described Romney as one of the "toughest guys I know," who will work with him regardless of party. "He'll be here to help me with what I'm trying to do," Obama said. "And if he's interested in being president, you bet he's going to be around." Romney was Obama's running mate in both of the past two presidential elections. He ran unsuccessfully in 2008 against Obama. Romney lost to the president in 2012 despite receiving more electoral votes. During the campaign, Romney pointed out that Obama and his wife, Michelle, had attended the Cambridge, Mass

Q: How can I use Perforce per-user access with git-svn? Background: We have a perforce instance for our code, and as part of our deployment process we have a git-svn repository. That works fine, as long as no one logs into perforce to edit the repository, as they'll be editing with the git-svn svn://... URL. Problem: The problem is that our git-svn processes make changes to the perforce files, but I have no clue how to configure git-svn to accept per-user access, so that it doesn't push every change to the svn repo, overwriting our perforce changes, and instead keeps our perforce instance as the authoritative version of the files. Solutions? A: The git svn wrapper will commit to your perforce repository as well as the svn repository. It will use perforce as the author of the commit. As long as you don't have a perforce update in between. If you are relying on perforce to synchronize the repository from every commit, you will need to change the workflows of you git clients.
