Ã Ã Ã Ã Q: How to check that unique constraint is satisfied in solr I have a table with ID, DATE and some other columns. I added three columns as unique key, as I have to search all records with ID. I wish to add a constraint in solr to check that if the value of any one of the columns has changed, that request should not be accepted. I read that this is called unique key check and provide details about solr in here. But the example provided is with solr core. I am not sure how the check is performed in this case. Can someone help me with that? A: According to the documentation you can add a constraint using the Solr Plugin: and specify which keys need to be unique like so: Solr doesn't guarantee that a query will return only records with the same key values. It's up to the client query code to check the query for unicity. [Cardiac index: relationship with age and prognosis in patients with acute anterior myocardial infarction.
