What's new in Monochrome RPG Episode 1: The Maniacal Morning:

Tweet To call Prince Ash of Raildex Games a “maiden” would be an understatement. And calling him a “game developer” is an understatement, although within the confines of his own space-time continuum, he might not feel himself as a person, but simply as a mere object created by the code of “reality”. This being so, the scope of Prince Ash’s ambitions extend far beyond building a new new realm, or making heroes out of real-time transhuman digital edutainment. His ultimate goal is to purge the universe of all human “fuzz”, that is, glitch, shit and occasionally incriminating secrets. First on the list is the Glitch and why it needs to be burnt away; then Glitch Protocol, a guide to live-action video game and film production. It’s a very good read if you are thinking about dabbling in the performance capture art of videogame motion capture. Consciously and subconsciously, everything Prince Ash does is motivated by his grander goal to become self-aware, and become a single point in the Cosmos. And this attention to negative, abstract and cosmic phenomena, drives him to protect and cherish the good, such as very beautiful songs. All of which give rise to the question, why the fascination with the untruthful impulses of the mind? I don’t want to delve too deeply in the mystery to even come close to articulating such a thing, but I’d like to hear your opinion on this.  “Reality” is... just the word. To me, the word is a bit misplaced, but functional. An illusion that your ordinary perceptions and rational thinking create. But a “true” illusion, where everything you see is actually not an illusion at all, but a tantalising glimpse into the undiscovered “real” world. Censoring the truth to fit your perception and reasoning is not the same as the truth itself; it is only a partial view. I would rather call it “just a word”, as it does not have any objective existence in the space-time continuum. The universe, mind and Consciousness come first. All of his songs concern this idea, but most directly, the desire to dissolve them into a more complete picture. Where reality is selective perception, this state of perfection cannot come
