In our case, we're trying to send a POST request to the LoadBalancer service with a body that is JSON formatted. For some reason, the body is always printed as null from the server. Here's the URL we're sending it to. This will return the logging info from the LoadBalancer service. Here's the URL the client is requesting with the body as JSON Here's the snippet of the code we're using to call the service XmlDocument doc = new XmlDocument(); HttpWebRequest request = (HttpWebRequest)WebRequest.Create(""); // add the client certificate to the request request.ClientCertificates.Add(cert); request.ContentType = "application/json"; request.Method = "POST"; using (var stream =
