Gesturn Serial [CRACKED]

on the arduino side, i open the serial port, as usual, using `serial.begin(9600)`. when the gesture is detected, the compiler gets to the line `arduinoport.open()` and gives an error: access to com3 is denied. i tried commenting that line out since i upload the arduino code first to the board so that might make the port already open. i still get the same error. i checked the device manager and com3 was already there and connected to the arduino board. where would the issue be could it be in my definition for the serial port itself finally, lets add in code to transmit the noses location over web serial. just as weve done in previous lessons, rather than transmit the raw x,y pixel location, we will transmit a normalized version between [0, 1] inclusive for both x and y. modify the `onposedetected(poses)` function as follows: calling `requestport()` prompts the user to select a device from the list and it returns a `serialport` object. once we have a `serialport` object, then calling `port.open()` with desired baud rate, it will open the port. the baud rate specifies how fast the data is sent over the serial line. it is expressed in units of bits-per-seconds(bps). calling `requestport()` prompts the user to select a device from the list and it returns a `serialport` object. once we have a `serialport` object, then calling `port.open()` with desired baud rate, it will open the port. the baud rate specifies how fast the data is sent over the serial line.
