Wind turbine blades are known for having main and secondary structures. The secondary structure can be attached to the main structure to form a blade. Traditionally, the blade is assembled using rivets, nuts and bolts, such as described in EP0619196, JP3789551, JP3997764, EP0968313, U.S. Pat. No. 6,039,935 and DE10124304. However, for some blade designs, bolting can be difficult to implement and/or difficult to access after manufacturing is complete. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 4,637,681 discloses a “bicycle” wheel wheel rim assembly, that allows the attachment of a wheel rim to a hub. The hub is bolted to a yoke that itself is attached to an axle. U.S. Pat. No. 6,863,835 discloses a wheel rim having a wheel hub, a wheel rim, and a wheel rim seat. The wheel hub is attached to a first plurality of spokes that extend radially outwardly of the wheel rim. The first plurality of spokes may be attached to a second plurality of spokes. The second plurality of spokes are attached to the wheel rim seat. A plurality of holes in the wheel rim seat are aligned to correspond to a plurality of holes in the wheel rim, which permits attachment of the second plurality of spokes to the wheel rim using rivets. Further known in the prior art are attaching mechanisms that permit secure attachment of a wheel rim to a wheel hub in a manner that allows rotational movement of the wheel rim. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 4,673,377 discloses a “wheel rim and wheel hub assembly” having a wheel rim, wheel hub, a plurality of spokes connecting the wheel rim to the wheel hub and a retaining ring adapted to secure the wheel rim to the wheel hub. Known attaching mechanisms can be difficult to implement and/or difficult to access after manufacture is complete. Further known attaching mechanisms typically use multiple parts and are only designed for wheel rims, not for wind turbine blades. Finally 79a2804d6b
